

Is the term consumer protection an oxymoron? Isn't it, that as a consumer I am already doomed? Doesn't this term have a stale by-taste of sarcasm? To me it seems like rising beef with all the possible care so it becomes healthy, brawny and after all tasty. A live in paradise to eventually get slaughtered and being eaten by it's foster steward. Keep the consumer healthy and paying, give him a good feeling of being cared for. Just to be continually eaten alive.
